2023 Annual Report

Corvallis
Public Schools
FOUNDATION

Our vision is that all students—regardless of race, culture, socioeconomic status, language, ability, gender, sexual orientation, or other identifiers—graduate as engaged community members, ready to contribute to their fullest potential and navigate the world’s complexities.

Corvallis
Public Schools
FOUNDATION

We are filled with gratitude for you, our community of supporters. And we are proud of what we have achieved, thanks to your generosity.

Together, we have worked to ensure that all students, especially the most vulnerable, have the resources they need to access the education they deserve. We have supported enriching educational opportunities that engage students’ excitement for learning, and prepare them to graduate ready to navigate the world’s complexities.

This year, we all witnessed escalating costs for essentials like groceries and gas. While this was an adjustment for many of us, it created a critical hardship for students and families navigating poverty—especially as funding for many government programs and community resources decreased. With your help we continued, and even increased, our support for families in need.

Your gifts allowed us to fund more IMAGINE Grants than ever before, providing innovative educational opportunities in all of our 13 schools. We expanded our student-driven Youth Empowerment and Action (YEA!) Grants to elevate student voices and inspire leadership, and we continued to support staff wellness and retention programs.

When the State said “No” to summer school funding, you said, “Yes!” Together, we supported critical programs that had an immediate impact on students’ lives, helping them connect with vital resources, access enrichment opportunities, and earn credit to stay on track to graduate.

Our work is not possible without you. We thank you for partnering with us to invest in our schools and realize the promise of education for all Corvallis students.

Tools for the Real World

Foundation grants support College Hill High School construction program

Students in Kevin Skillings' construction program at College Hill High School probably never wonder if what they're learning has a real-world application.

That's because Skillings' two-year program is focused on the real world: Students pick up the skills they need to immediately step into construction jobs.

“The students have done great work... building not only their skills, but their understanding of how these shelters fit into the continuum of solutions for those experiencing homelessness.”

This year, the students' work had an additional real-world link: They built two microshelters—livable quarters about the size of a garden shed—for Unity Shelter's Safe Place program, which shelters people who are homeless. Unity Shelter paid for the microshelter materials.

But it was two earlier $5,000 IMAGINE Grants from the Corvallis Public Schools Foundation that allowed the construction program to buy tools and other essentials.

“They essentially gave me the tools and the seed money to get it rolling,” Skillings said.

The program includes 14 juniors and 14 seniors. Students learn about working with wood, metal, automobiles and drafting, and then tackle hands-on projects.

Skillings also emphasizes the so-called “soft skills”—teamwork, communication, dependability.

And he keeps the focus on the real world—and the opportunities awaiting those who finish the program.

For most students, the message sticks. Skillings said at least two of his seniors had jobs lined up before graduation.

Shawn Collins, the executive director of Unity Shelter, was impressed: “The students have done great work,” he said, “building not only their skills, but their understanding of how these shelters fit into the continuum of solutions for those experiencing homelessness.”

It's all part of a real-world education. 🌱

Exhibiting Talent

Celebrating the first-ever districtwide art show

Fueled by a $5,000 IMAGINE Grant from the Corvallis Public Schools Foundation, art teacher Christa Schmeder and administrative assistant Claudia Enciso Kuraica organized a districtwide art show, a first for the Corvallis School District.

On April 20, the two celebrated with other district employees, parents and students during an event billed as the “CSD pARTy” at Benton County’s newly remodeled Kalapuya Building.

“This was hiding in the schools...”

Enciso Kuraica had organized small art shows in the boardroom of the District’s administrative offices. She enjoyed that work but wanted to mount a districtwide show in a bigger venue. She enlisted Schmeder to help. Finding a suitable location was a challenge, but Enciso Kuraica finally got a tip that led to the Kalapuya Building.

It looks like the start of a beautiful friendship: It seems likely that the districtwide art show has found a home for years to come.

Schmeder and Enciso Kuraica were delighted that the show featured a number of collaborative works in which every student in an elementary school was able to participate. “Our elementary program is really one of the things we wanted to highlight,” Schmeder said.

Individual schools in the district may host their own art shows, and those are important, she said, “because that’s the school community coming together.”

But a districtwide show also is important, Schmeder and Enciso Kuraica said, because it allows students to see their own work featured outside their schools—and it gives parents and community members a wider view of the quality and scope of the artwork students are creating.

“Now it’s not hiding.”

To illustrate the point, Enciso Kuraica gestured at the artwork filling the lobby of the Kalapuya Building and stretching into the hallways and the building’s second floor. “This was hiding in the schools,” she said.

Schmeder finished the thought: “Now it’s not hiding.” 🍷

Saving the Summer

Community steps up to help preserve vital summer programs

In 2022, the state of Oregon allocated $150 million for summer learning programs offered by school districts and community-based organizations.

In 2023, the Legislature allocated a somewhat smaller amount: zero.

School districts scrambled to salvage summer programs, which help students who have fallen behind or need additional enrichment. Many districts eliminated their programs.

The Corvallis School District had an ace in the hole, Superintendent Ryan Noss said. For years, the Corvallis Public Schools Foundation has supported the district's summertime programs. Noss and other district leaders asked if the Foundation could step up to help fill the unexpected funding shortfall—and to preserve what Noss called the “vital work of summer programs.”

The Foundation—and its donors—said “yes.”

Foundation money, combined with special education funds and resources from the district's high school success program, allowed 500 Corvallis students to participate in summer 2023 programs.

The programs included COVID recovery services for students on special education plans, allowing them to keep pace with peers, in addition to high school credit-recovery programs that allowed 100 students to stay on track for graduation, even as other districts had to abandon or downsize their programs.

Gerding Builders, a longtime donor to the Foundation, understands the importance of the summertime programs. “It's just a tremendous investment in our youth,” said Monte Smith, Gerding's CEO.

Smith toured some of those programs a few years ago and was impressed. Seeing the programs firsthand—“and to see the good they're doing”—makes it an easy call to donate to the Foundation, he said.

In particular, Smith said, Gerding Builders appreciates the Foundation's ability to pivot quickly to help the school district cope with unexpected developments—such as a sudden funding shortfall.

“Their ability to fill that need, whatever that may be, is a huge thing for us.”

Summer student, Sam, with teacher, Matt McDonough

“Coming to summer school really made me feel like I got something for the work I put in, that I can succeed in school and in life.”
Sam B.
